The qualification consisted out of several face-to-face and interactive facilitation session held monthly at HBZ offices in Durban, with Johannesburg learners linked in via video conference.

The learners were required to attend all facilitated sessions throughout the Learnership, which were presented by an expert facilitator, according to Bernadette Felix of FRTC.

“Although difficult to quantify the value of the learning gained, evidence does exist to support the value added of the qualification by those who participated on the project,” she said. “An increase in productivity and newly found enthusiasm for their work has been noted by supervisors and the HR department alike.” She added that post project review shows that productivity and employee morale was boosted by this programme and the candidates who were on the programme on now better skilled at performing their duties due to the skills development.

“Learners who were on the programme are adding value to the business with many fellow colleagues also wanting to participate on a similar Learnership. Learners are receptive and eager to learn. This was a phenomenal group to work with. Standard of assessments received were excellent,” said Felix.

Overall learners enjoyed the Learnership and are grateful for the opportunity that Bankseta provided through funding and support.
